

On the road to Hamilton Station. Not bad riding.

Down into the claypan.

A few Dalhousie Springs 4WDs race on by in a cloud of dust.

Abminga to the left, Dalhousie or Simpson Desert to right. Near Hamilton Station.

Another quiet campsite on Hamilton Station.

Adam Plate put a lot of effort into those signs.

Road's pretty good. Even some markers.

Camping at the fabulous Eringa waterhole. Where's all that water come from, it's a kilometre long.

Eringa Homestead, the first purchase of Sidney Kidman on the way to becoming the richest guy in the world.

Turned off to Abminga the track becomes less discernible. Some don't make it.

That black moonscape is called gibber plain. There's a bit about for a while.

Them corrugations are real filling removers. Nothing lasts forever.

Abminga. Ain't much there except for railway station ruins in termite riddled condition.

Not much left of the Charlotte Water Telegraph Station.

Yeah, you skirt the Simpson Desert. Guess this is the Simpson Desert.

This is real pretty, huh?

Sure looks like desert to me. Sand ain't such good riding.

New Crown Station. Watch out for those big dogs!

Almost to Finke.

There's 14km of this stuff south of New Crown homestead but just isolated 200m stretches after that.

After Finke the road looks pretty good. Always worth while to get off the bike and climb a hillock for a view.

Lambert Centre. Have to head in there for a look.

The track into Lambert Centre isn't real good. Ride through the shrubbery at times.

They do a fair amount of work on these roads. Can soften the riding surface up.

The last of Adam Plate's informative signs at Kulgera out on the Stuart Highway.
